The Department of Comparative Literature offers a small number of courses during Summer Session, consistent with a very modest demand for such offerings. In the past, these courses have been taught by graduate students in the Department. Indeed, the probability of summer teaching is something the Department uses to aid in the recruitment of applicants to the doctoral program.

Given the relatively light demand for summer courses in COLT, the Department would not be able to afford to staff these courses with TTF or NTTF, nor have TTF or NTTF ever requested summer teaching. The Department will thus continue to restrict the assignment of summer teaching to graduate students. Should this policy change, the TTF and NTTF will convene to revise the Department’s policy.
